

Never Became Us

At first, my eyes were quiet, unseen
A hidden dream, a heart kept clean
Each fleeting glance at your gentle face
Was music that carried me to a sacred place.

So I gathered courage, though filled with fear
Walked a path that would draw me near
With flowers, poems, and words I gave
Each offering whispered, hoping you'd be swayed.

In every laughter, in every small talk
My heart believed we shared the same walk
And every smile you softly returned
Lit in my chest a fire that burned.

Yet time will turn, and wounds will fade,
New roads await, though once afraid.
For love is more than being returned,
It lives in the lessons my spirit has learned.

Perhaps in another life, another day
Our souls may meet in a gentler way
Where laughter lingers, where love won't flee
Where "you and I" is more than a plea.

But for this life, I'll guard the flame
Not with regret, nor bitter blame.
For loving you, though it brought me scars
Taught me to reach beyond the stars.

And when I look back, I will not cry
But smile at the boy who dared to try
. For even if "we" was never true
I found my courage—all because of you.
